The first application of the Cream allayed the itching immediately, and this annoying symptom not returning. THE Partnership Bill now before the House model for an amendment of our local part nership law. It was introduced by the Lord Chancellor on the 20th February, and its object is "to declare and amend the Law of Partnership." It contains 52 sections, and these are set forth under the following heads:-The nature of partnership, the relation of partners to persons dealing with them, their relations to one another, dissolution of partnership, and vidually, and of the firm, for acts of partners is defined. A new feature in the Bill is the provision that in future a writ of execution shall not issue against partnership property except on a judgment against the firm itself, but the High Court or a County Court may in such a case make an order charging that partner's share in the partnership property and profits with payment of the judgment debt, and may appoint a receiver of the partner's share. The Court may also direct [378 a sale of such share, power being reserved, however, to the other partner or partners to redeem or to purchase the share. Rules are also laid down defining the rights and obligations of partners towards each other in cases where these are not expressly settled

The Chinese in this Colony are, as is well known, strongly impressed with the defectiveness of the present partnorship law and have at various times potitioned that a system of compulsory registration of partnerships should be established. With the law in its present state, and the uncertainty attaching to various partnership relations, registration would be impossible, or if attempted would be found worse than useless. The new Bill, however, appears to deal with the principal points which have bitherto stood in the way of registration, defining as it does the position and responsibility of what are commonly called paid partners and of persons who lend money profit. A correspondent of the Manchester Guardian urges the introduction of the prininto the Lord Chancellor's Bill. This principle, he says, has been adopted in every other leading commercial country, notably in the United States of America, in France, and in Germany, and he gives thu following description, of it: "A limited We invite attention to the following old landed partnership consists of one or more general partners who conduct the business of the firm, trading under their own names, and who are liable for all the debts of the firm the usual way, and one or more special or miles along a very dangerous coast. At the maintenance of the works and the incidental ex-'limited' partners, who have nothing to do with the management of the business and whose names do not appear in the style of the firm, but who contribute to the capital of the firm a stated amount, which is declared by an advertisement, say, in the Gazette. Case. Per Bot. These limited partners participate in the profits of the firm, on such terms as are arranged by the contract of partnership, which must always be in writing; but if the firm amount which they have so paid in towards the capital of the firm. It will be observed that this contribution is actual capital not a loan to the general partners." Commenting on the above the Guardain says:-"It appears that the effect of the kind of grangement in question is that foreigners engineers are the great pioneers of civilization with knowledge and ability to conduct business but with insufficient capital do, in fact, receive extraneous assistance in this way which is out of the reach of British subjects in like circumstances. The question of the introduction of the commandite principle into English partnership law is therefore a very important one, and now is the time when it | that he contemplates retirement. should be fully discussed, and adopted, unless there be the strongest reasons for excluding it. In France the principle has been in operation for at least seventy years-a period long enough certainly to have afforded ample experience for the purpose of testing its utility." Whatever may be said as to the introduc- | year. tion of the commandite principle into England, it would probably be gladly welcomed by the Chinese in this Colony, to whose usual partnership arrangements it seems to bear a not remote resemblance. In China partner- United States at a price not exceeding one ship capital is usually subscribed in shares dollar for three hundred and seventy-one and of one tenth each, and the non-managing partners practically consider their liability A majority in congress sim at securing free limited to the amount of their subscript silver coinage. tion. If the names of such partners were published in the Gasette with the amount of the capital advanced by them the credit of the firm would be much more accurately ascertainable than at present. The effect of the existing law is that when a sident; Major-General Gordon, Vice-President; failure takes place every one endeavours to conceal connection with the firm in order to escape liability for the firm debts, and the J. S. Humphreys, Mr. N. J. Ede, and Mr. H. winding up is obstructed by the difficulty of ascertaining who the real partners are. " Is that you? Come in here for one moment. Such good news!" ories Nan, rushing into the corridor as she hears her husband's stop pass her door, and dragging him into her dressing-room. where sits Bartle, in all the glory of a new and perfectly built suit of evening clothes - the result of his brother-in-law's last kindly "tip." " He has passed!" goes on Nan, still with her hand on Hume's arm, and staring into his face to see if his satisfaction is sound to her own—to note the glad triumph that she expects to see there. Providentially the does see it. "He heard only his morning; and hurried home. Isn't it glorious news ! . He has passed for the Civil Service. Now! Didn't I always say it?

Isn't he clever?" " He makes one proud of him." says Hume, with a smile at Bartle, who is blushing beneath this heavy weight of praise. He is quite aware that his wife's delight and excitement has led her into this sudden friendliness. To declare her joyful news is a necessity to her; and if he had not been present at the noment, another would have served her purpose just as well. He is not dead to all these facts: yet, for all that, a thrill of happiness warms his yoins, as he feels her hand upon his arm.
